“People of the Land: Preserving Indigenous Sacred Sites”

Join us for a conversation with Dr. Daisy Ocampo from the History Department. She will discuss the relationship between sacred sites and Native communities, an often-overlooked component of sovereignty and social justice today. Colonization disrupted this relationship and continues to do so through local, state and federal preservation entities. Dr. Daisy Ocampo will provide a new way of looking at preservation by centering Indigenous community histories.

Daisy Ocampo is from the Caz' Ahmo Indigenous Nation of Zacatecas, Mexico. Her research in Native and Public History informs her work with museum exhibits, historical preservation projects, and community-based archives. Her research creates a new direction of inclusivity in Public History that visibilizes Indigenous people, voices and community narratives.
